Captain Creeden Thinks Insanity Alone Accounts for the Highwayman's Audacity.

CHIEF DAREDEVIL OF THEM ALL.

In Thirty-three Years' Police Experience the Captain Never Saw His Equal. Morrisania Women Dare Not Answer Door Bells.

Captain Creeden has seventy of his men on duty day and night-thirty-five in the daytime and thirty-five at night-merely for the purpose of catching "the man in the long gray coat," as he is called in Morrisania. The residents of the precinct are in a state of terrow—especially the female resients. The mysterious individual has, in the last four days, assaulted three different women. It seems likely, too, that this same highwayman has ventured nearer to the heart of the city and that it was he who obbed a poor working girl in Central Park Monday morning.

"The man in the long gray coat" committed the first of these robberles last Saturday evening, when, at One Hundred and Sixtyfirst street and Boston road, he held up Miss Nellie Mooney, a typewriter, knocked her down, kicked her and stole a small sum of money and several articles of jewelry. This

The next morning, at 7:30 o'clock, the same man rang the basement bell of the residence of Mrs. Emily Richard, at No. 849 East One Hundred and Sixty-fourth street. When Mrs. Richard opened the door, think-ing it was the man who delivers the Sunday papers, the "man in the long gray coat" thrust a small, pearl-handled revolver in her face and said quietly: "Don't say a word or I'll"- Mrs. Richard, thoroughly frightened, slammed the door, screamed and fell

His Third Appearance. His third appearance was on Tuesday evening, at 7:15 o'clock. Mrs. Frank Holdsworth, who lives in the first flat at No. 3196 Third avenue with her husband, two sous and Policeman Decker, a lodger, was walking down Spring place near Franklin avenue. It is a somewhat lonely locality, and as she neared the corner she noticed a man in a long gray cont leaning against the picket fence. As she started to pass he selzed her arm and, pointing to a small parcel which she had in her hand, exhimed: "What have you in there?"

"None of your business," replied Mrs. dsworth, who, though very small, is arge in courage. The man dealt her a neavy blow upon the head, and threw both arms about her body so that she could not move. He then searched her thoroughly, as he undoubtedly thought, and started to tear from her ears a pair of earrings, but discovering that they were rhinestones, said, "They're snide; you can keep them." He then knocked her down, their own door bells. The Captain is bending every effort to apprehend the offender. He has every available man in his command walking about the precinet in elvilian's dress. Even such murders as those of "Old Shakespeare" and little Mamie Cunningham did not serve to scatter so many plain clothes men about one precinet. "I believe," said Captain Creeden yesterday, "that the man must be insane. The only change he appears to have made in his attire is that when he attacked Miss Mooney and Mrs. Richard he wore a soft, black hat, while when he robbed Mrs. Holdsworth he wore an astrakhan cap, slightly pulled down over the ears."
